Can military installations provide support services?

installation commanders' ability to request additional resources for maintaining support services, such as housing and health care. We have reported on DOD efforts to provide support services at military installations in general, and identified challenges that may impact the availability and quality of those services.

What if military installations are located in remote areas?

Without systematically assessing the additional risks associated with installations located in remote or isolated areas, DOD and the military services may not be positioned to target needed resources or to develop strategies to better meet the needs of servicemembers and their dependents.

Who provides installation support services for DoD-managed facilities?

Installation support services for DOD-managed facilities are generally provided by an associated DOD component (i.e., a defense agency, field activity, or U.S. Special Operations Command). However, if the DOD facility resides on a MILDEP-owned installation, then the host military service may also provide certain upkeep services.
