Does Venezuela have a ballistic missile arsenal?

Unlike Iran, Venezuela does not have an arsenal of tens of thousands of ballistic missiles capable of blocking the critical oil shipping straits of Hormuz and devastating the military bases of the United States and the population and oil production centres of its allies throughout the region.

Is a military operation against Venezuela possible?

Unlike other threats of regime change wars made by the United States, Syria, Iran and North Korean being prime examples, a military operation against Venezuela appears a far more feasible prospect.

Does Venezuela have a military?

Venezuela's military is numerically and technologically outmatched by the U.S., according to publicly available data. The U.S. has over 13,000 aircraft compared with the South American nation's 229, which includes Russian Su-30s, Iranian drones and aging U.S.-made F-16s from the 1980s.

Is a US military attack on Venezuela possible?

While an American military attack on Venezuela is considered unlikely, escalating tensions between President Donald Trump and Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro have cast light on the disparities between the two countries' militaries.

Does Venezuela have a cruise missile system?

This specialised S-300 variant was deployed to protect Russia's forces in Syria alongside the S-400, and exceeds the S-400 in its anti missile capabilities. Venezuela has operated two battalions of these systems since 2012, which are supposedly capable of neutralising any cruise missile attacks by any known missile systems.

Does Venezuela have a surface fleet?

The surface fleet is centered around corvettes, including Avante 1500 and Avante 2200 classes, alongside amphibious assault ships and patrol vessels. To bolster its capabilities, Venezuela has recently acquired Peykaap III-class missile boats from Iran, armed with anti-ship missiles.
