Will Bolivia build a lithium battery plant in China?

La Paz (AFP) – Bolivia said Tuesday it had signed a $1 billion deal with China's CBC, a subsidiary of the world's largest lithium battery producer CATL, to build two lithium carbonate production plants in the country's southwest.

Does Bolivia have a lithium mine?

Bolivia has large, lithium-rich salt flats, but its state-owned mining company hasn't achieved large-scale production. A group of Chinese firms is partnering with YLB, Bolivia's state-owned lithium mining company, to build a $1 billion project to exploit Bolivia's large and mostly untapped lithium resources.

Will Bolivian lithium project hit a target?

It's unlikely the project will hit that target, says Andy Leyland, founder of the battery supply chain consultancy SC Insights. He says local opposition and changes in political leadership have stopped Bolivian lithium projects in the past, and those factors remain a challenge for this venture.

Why is Bolivia focusing on lithium industrialization?

Bolivia, which has been historically dependent on natural gas exports, is now seeking to diversify its economic base and consolidate lithium industrialization as a central pillar of its government policy.

Why did Bolivia sign a lithium agreement with foreign companies?

The president of Bolivia, Luis Arce, highlighted the importance of this agreement as the second agreement signed with foreign companies that are betting on Bolivian lithium to advance its industrialization process. The signing of the agreement took place at an event held at the Casa Grande del Pueblo, the Bolivian presidential residence.
